

SRCD presents: Social Neuroscience Perspectives on Child Development

September 16-17, 2015 in Leiden, The Netherlands

This meeting will focus on some exciting advances in developmental social and affective neuroscience, with a strong emphasis on understanding how social experiences actively shape developing neural systems in children and adolescents. The broad goals of this conference are to promote an integrative developmental science approach to understanding social and emotional development. The conference will include special sessions for students, invited keynote speakers, a symposium on the neuroscience of prosocial development, and a closing panel discussion on future directions for this exciting and rapidly growing field.
