What is the Flux Congress?

The aim of the Flux Congress is to provide a forum for neuroscientists to share their findings on how the brain develops from fetal, through childhood and adolescence to young adulthood. It is the only conference of its kind that brings together scientists from around the world to exchange ideas to understand how brain development affects processes including: cognition, learning, emotion, and language, normatively but also in disorders such as mental illness with a collective goal to improve life trajectories.

The Flux Society was launched in June 2014 and has seen growth in its membership each year.
